Let's Dance: Diabelli, Beethoven, Carter Pann, and Two Hundred Years of a Viennese Waltz

View Presentation

In 1819 Anton Diabelli composed a Waltz and sent it to the most famous composers working in Vienna. Beethoven initially cast aside Diabelli's waltz, later writing his own set, Op. 120. Fifty composers responded to Diabelli's request, creating a second set of variations. The beloved Waltz theme is a manifestation of Viennese culture. Furthermore, one can consider variation structure in light of social issues: as a formal procedure, variations are unified by their relationship to a theme, while at the same time embracing diversity. Suddenly, then, variations as art can express a model for social justice. To that end, in the spirit of Diabelli's innovative musical experiment, new variations have been commissioned. A performance of several of the new variations, including one by Pulitzer Prize Finalist Carter Pann, will be interwoven around discussions about creative compositional solutions, and what the new variations achieve as art reflecting society. Dr. Jensen-Abbott has now recorded a three-CD set of all three works, and her website, diabellisquared.com is running. If you are interested in composing a variation for this ongoing project, please visit the website and email Dr. Jensen-Abbott at ljensen@albion.edu.
